Metro Manila's 'largest septic tank' near death

By Eugene L. Tan

MANILA, Philippines — A massive septic tank, the largest in Metro Manila, is nearing the end of its life span, according to a report by the city's water department. The tank, which serves an area of about 1,000 hectares, is estimated to be about 40 years old and is in need of major repairs. The water department is currently studying the feasibility of building a new, larger septic tank to replace the existing one. The current tank is located in a remote area of the city and is surrounded by residential areas. The water department is concerned that the tank may collapse at any time, which could cause a major disaster. The department is also worried that the tank may leak, which could contaminate the surrounding water supply. The department is currently working on a plan to build a new tank, but it is not sure when the new tank will be built. The department is also considering other options, such as building a new water treatment plant. The department is currently in the process of conducting a feasibility study for the new tank. The study is expected to be completed by the end of the year. The department is also considering other options, such as building a new water treatment plant.
